

My husband, who is totally blind, was one of the many people who were stranded on the night of the big snowstorm. After waiting for many hours for a bus that never came he started back to City Hall to his place of business. By that time the snow was so heavy that neither he nor his dog could tell the sidewalk from the street. A policeman helped him across the street and made sure that he was going in the right direction to City Hall.

Later Officer Don Dexter picked him up and took him to a downtown hotel. We just want to thank the Police Department for their kindness and let them know we are proud of them.
